

Air Force Falls for my Trap: Reports Zero Sunspots

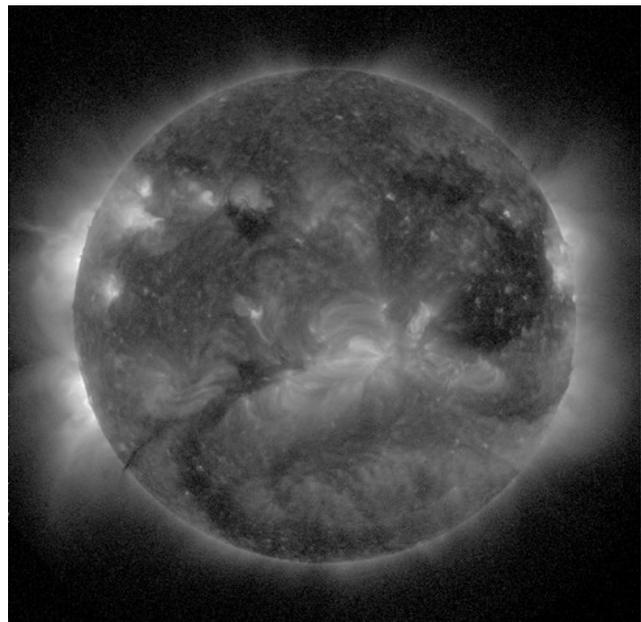

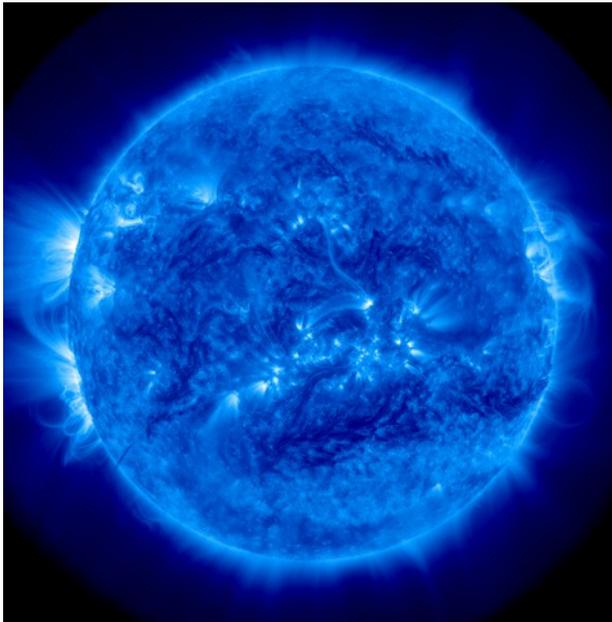

by Miles Mathis

February 24, 2026

Hahhah, they fell for it. I pissed off Air Force so much they decided to erase every single spot today, reporting zero. They figured if they were going to fake this, why not go all the way? In for a penny, in for a pound. Good one, guys, you really showed me.

Unfortunately, they decided to do that on a day NASA was publishing these photos of the Sun:

Does that really look to you like a dormant Sun, with zero activity? I see at least nine major active areas that should yield spots, maybe even large ones, with more HUGE ones on the left limb coming up. But I guess they think you are blind. Or they just don't care.

This may not actually be aimed at me. It may be aimed at the mainstream crybabies looking over their shoulders and screaming “why don't you do something!” As if Air Force can just wave a magic wand and kill the Sun. What I wouldn't give to be a fly on the wall there. A magnificent, epoch-making, epoch-ending meltdown. We will be sweeping up the pieces for decades. I hope these people had their health insurance paid up, since the therapy bills are about to go through the roof.
